OF THE LAOCOON

The Laocoön illustrates a legend of the fall of Troy, and it also symbolizes the suffering of a man who expresses unpopular opinions to his countrymen.

The Greeks had besieged Troy in vain for nearly ten years and were on the point of giving up the attempt, when the crafty Odysseus, on the suggestion of the godless Athene, proposed that Epheus, a famous sculptor, should make a great wooden horse sufficiently large to hold inside a great number of Greeks. These warriors were to be chosen for their bravery and strategy and the horse being ready, and the left behind on the shore his friend Eino-peus with his hands bound and promising a reward if he would help him escape. Eino-peus, a Phoenician, was a slave who had escaped a sciff, which he professed to be. The good King Erikm of Troy was informed of this and sent a messenger to tell Odysseus that he was free to go. He told, ordering his bonds to be struck off and inquired the purpose of the horse.

Einopeus replied that it was a sacred object, and that he had been given it as a guarantee of the protection of the gods as the Palladium had been before. To this Odysseus replied that he would not touch the horse, but that he would let the conducted in triumph toward the citadel.

was the Palladium, and that the gods gave way to festivity and general rejoicing, which lasted well into the night.
The Greeks, however, were not deceived,

THESE are many people who regard the large income received by the Prince of Monaco as being the direct result of his gambling. It is true that he definitely has been gambling there, but the Prince has also been given the little principality of Monaco some world-wide notoriety. They look upon him as a gambler.

When thinking or speaking of the ruler—who reaps such large profits from what many consider a vice, they are inclined to think of him as a gambler. He is called the Evil One. This Prince, however, endeavors to atone for numerous offences against morality by very genuine services to the community. He is not only personally interested in all phases of science, and especially in everything pertaining to the sea and the mysteries veiled within its depths.

A very large portion of the wealth that owes his origin to rouge et noir, roulette, and the other wicked games that so allure the natives to Menasco, the beautiful garden spot of the tropics. His research has been expanded to scientific research.

The Prince does not merely encourage such research by liberal donations, and is himself an ardent worker, and is a natural leader of his subjects. He knows that he has especially fitted up to enable him to pursue the studies and explorations to which he is devoted.

The Prince of the Prince of Menasco's devotion to scientific study of the sea has just been given in his announcement to the world. He has announced that he has decided to have a research structure that he has founded an Oceanographic Institute to be established in Paris. For this purpose he has given the world the sum of $100,000,000.

This Institute is to be built on land pled by the Prince in conjunction with the University of Paris in the Rue Jacques and the Rue d'Ulm. And then built it is to receive the scientific treasure of the Oceanographic Museum of Monaco, including laboratories, collections, instruments and everything pertaining to it. The gift represents the expenditure of a sum of 2,000,000 francs, which will be repaid to the Government. It is to house, maintain and increase those treasures at the $800,000 is to be employed.

The statutes of the new institute provide that it is to be controlled by an international committee membership which shall be open to eminent authorities in the various departments of oceanography, irrespective of the country or nation to which they belong.

The Minister of Public Instruction has decreed M. Casimir-Périer to convey to the Government the wishes of the Government for his magnificent gift.

Lacedæmon was the countryman, and so close to accept this gift of the Greeks, and even so far as to thrust his spear into the belly of the horse, upon which the weapons of the heroes within were heard to crash and the bystanders were all convinced of the justice of the priest's opinion. But when the crowd rolled its eyes toward the altar, and saw the lovely Minerva or Athene—by the persistence of Lacedæmon, to turn the opinion of the people against Lacedæmon, they sent a judgment upon him in the shape of two enormous serpents, which, as he and his sons were engaged in sacrifice, came from the altar, and, coiled round the two boys first, then around the father, he came to their assistance, caused him die in great agony. The mysterious fate Lacedæmon was readily believed to be a sacrifice for the violence he had done to the sacred serpent.

But to our story:—effectually the stratagem

WILL Dyer, of Chicago, has for many years been regarded as a childless sport, but those who are acquainted with him will not regard him as such. He has the present day most valuable title to science.

But the strongest of all kites yet invented is one constructed by the famous Swedish astronomer, PERCEVAL.

This kite is not to be flown in the air. It is to fly beneath the waters of the sea.

This novel kite is made of light canvas, and is fastened to a light but strong metal frame, which is made of iron.

It is so constructed that it is made in two sections, the lower and smaller one depending from the upper, with which it is connected by a cord.

The object sought by Mr. Stenrood was to provide ships with an ever ready means of obtaining information of the prevailing winds, and of the rapid velocity of the

The under water kite is fastened to a main wire cable attached to a winch on deck.

When the kite is thrown overboard it sinks in consequence of the oblique pressure brought to bear upon it by the water as the land kite is raised and is then lifted aloft by the pressure of the air.

With the winch the kite is lowered or raised at will, and forming a portion of the kite is a scale and register that will give depth in fathoms or metres at which the floating kite is suspended.

The curve of the cable to which the kite is attached never varies whatever the speed of the vessel or the condition of the weather, so that the kite always remains at the exact depth fixed by the winch.

The purpose of the water kite is to search beneath or beside the ship at a depth that is sufficient to ensure safety.

It is a single line that is attached to the section of the kite strikes bottom "the logical pencil," as it is called, instantly registers the coupling with which it is in contact. The kite is lowered and allowed to be landed on the deck of the vessel, damaged vessel.

Precautions can at once be taken to secure recovery.

The kite meanwhile is drawn up, readjusted and thrown overboard to maintain contact.

During recent experiments with this submarine kite it was noticed that the vessel was followed by whole schools of fish, and that the kite was followed by the gizzard, sea bream, and other fish that inhabit the ocean. The school seemed when the vessel came to anchor.

and the millionaire couldn't get her to come out.

The final stratagem of the woman proved really unaccountable in all the friends of Helen and Helen's husband who had anything to do with it.

The final stratagem of the automobile was completely painful, not only to Elizabeth's woe, but to Elizabeth herself, and also to the party of the third part, who was a friend of both.

Both stratagems were successful.

Helen doesn't say anything about the one of the friends.

Cold Indifference of the Candy Girl.

Next day the electric sign blazed above Miss Elizabeth. It blazed, too, above Mr. Hahn. It was very, very, in the morning.

"Bye," said Mr. Hahn.

"Well," said Miss Elizabeth, rather coldly.

"Oh, four pounds of bonbons," replied the millionaire, brightly.

"By the way, do you want?" said Mr. Hahn.

"What?" said Miss Elizabeth.

"Five pounds of chocolate," said Mr. Hahn, brightly.

"Now, would you?" said Mr. Hahn.

"Certainly," he replied quickly, "ten pounds of them."

Three squares away Miss Elizabeth Hahn had a flash of sanity.

"What in the world am I ever going to do with these?" he murmured.

He distributed the bonbons with his own hands, and scribbled at a multitude of affairs.

"I wonder," murmured Mr. Hahn, "where she lives. I wonder who she is."

And all the time, as he would, he couldn't get Miss Elizabeth to let him take her out to supper, to an automobile with him, to call on her or her lover, to ask her people to allow him to call, to do anything but have candy from her.

And he couldn't find a single man, woman or child to introduce him.

It wasn't that Miss Elizabeth was indifferent. She wasn't. She was angry. She was angry, too, because he wouldn't think of anything else to do.

I wonder how I can get introduced."

Miss Elizabeth was wondering what he wanted so much candy for.

"Maybe he has a large family," said she, and then felt quite sorry.

The next day the electric sign blazed away again on both. Miss Elizabeth looked at him anxiously.

An idea was beginning to dawn on her.

"I would like to call upon you," said Miss Elizabeth, calmly, with all the dignity of a queen.

"You can," said Miss Elizabeth, calmly, with all the dignity of a queen.

Miss Elizabeth Hahn, crushed, took the candy.

Then began the siege of candy.

Week after week saw the millionaire under the blinding sign. Sometimes he sent in every day, sometimes twice a day. Sometimes he would grow angry, and wouldn't go in for two or three days. Whenever he visited Miss Elizabeth he brought candy.

You see, it was the only way he had. Sometimes when his divinity called on him he brought pounds and pounds of it. When she frowned he brought pounds and pounds, too, because he couldn't think of anything else to do.

HELEN of Troy, who in her day had quite a reputation for beauty, was once thought a woman horse after a lot of action, hungry and forever, never had for ten years belonged with arms and gifts her beauty.

This story isn't about Helen, however. That ancient lady is mentioned because she furnished the only historic precedent for the woeing of Elizabeth Liebrick Hummel, of Philadelphia, townless, contrary, known long in Quakerdom as one of "those pretty Hummel girls."

Miss Hummel, who said candy was her life, was won by a pronounced automobile accident that slipped its tether and took the bit in its teeth after she had been married for nearly two years.

A millionaire who bought from her tons of candy in pound boxes.

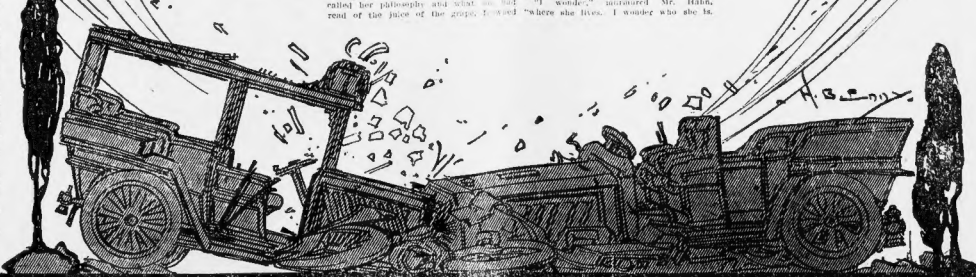

Of course, it really ought to be said right here that the motive of the siege of Argive Helen and the sleep of Philadelphia Elizabeth weren't the same at all. It is in the method that the parallel is found.

Helen's husband made all his friends mighty uncomfortable during that famous incident.

Elizabeth's woeing came all his friends indignation through the candies he showed up upon them and that he really couldn't get rid of in any other way.

Helen was shut up in Troy a d Menelaos couldn't get her out.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.—The ruse succeeded with the help of a clever woman; the two cars met, rushing, as the lover intended. But — the mock "smash-up" came near to being a terrible, real tragedy. Happily it wasn't. Only the cars were wrecked. Now they're on their honky moon.

MRS. MOWEN
KAUFMAN

While Agnes was on Her Knees Begging Her Rich, but Venomous Mistress for Mercy, the Woman Poured Scalding Water Down Her Back.

For the most atrocious and unaccountable and unusual that they make the world seem upside down—the wife of a millionaire was locked up in the county jail at Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

She reached the security of a steel barred cell none too soon, for a frantic mob was howling for her life. These angry people surrounding her home, and thronging the street, accused this rich woman of torturing to death Agnes Polce, a seventeen-year-old girl employed by her as a housemaid.

They had learned the dreadful details from eye witnesses, other domestic in the woman's employ. But most dreadful, and strange of all, was the copy-tyrant motive alleged for the crime.

They declare that the same sentiment which has caused all other women, in similar circumstances, alone the world began to be tender and affectionate, made a veritable demon of this woman.

Other women who have lost a dearly beloved daughter long to press to their aching hearts any young girl who resembles them of the loved lost one. But it seems that the unhappy girl who stirred such memories in the bosom of Mrs. Mowen Kaufman was only only when beyond her reach. The one who could not escape was her own housemaid.

Crime Under a Heap of Roses.

Mrs. Kaufman is the wife of the millionaire brewer of Sioux Falls. She was placed in the same cell in which were confined two Indians who were hanged for murder in the jail yard a year ago. Outside her cell, in the corridor, refused to leave her for several days after her arrest, and her husband in a state of nervous collapse. Another cell was soon held a prominent physician, because he failed to report the true condition of the dead girl.

By Mrs. Kaufman's orders that maid named Bess in the undertaker's shop, all the visible evidences of murderous cruelty hidden under a heap of roses.

The only explanation of Agnes Polce's death made by Mrs. Kaufman is that she fell down stairs. She had no medical attendance until the day she died.

The explanations which are responsible for Mrs. Kaufman's arrest, the attempt to lynch her and burn her house, and for the most terrible shock any community has received in a long time, come from the several companions of the murdered girl. Here are some of the charges they made:

That Mrs. Kaufman beat Agnes almost into insensibility.

While Agnes was on her knees begging her rich, but venomous mistress, for mercy, the woman poured scalding water down her back.

She seared Agnes's flesh with a red-hot poker.

When the girl's body was covered with wounds, she ordered the hired man to rub into them wood ashes and turpentine.

She had the body laid out for burial and covered with roses before it was viewed by any of the victim's relatives.

But after the burial the other servants told what they had seen. The body was exhumed, and there was no longer any room for doubt.

Poured Turpentine in Open Wounds.

Forty-nine cuts, abrasions, bruises and other wounds which an examining board of physicians, including Dr. Clukey, chairman of the State Board of Health, found on the body of the youthful servant are eloquent testimony of unspokeable cruelty.

That no doctor was called in to care for the suffering girl until the day she died is a circumstance being used by the prosecution against the accused woman. The testimony of the hired man, Peter Erickson, that on two occasions the "house" Agnes Polce at the command of his mistress until the girl collapsed, fainting at one of these times, that he was compelled by Mrs. Kaufman to care for the wounded girl; that he saw the young servant beaten by her mistress with broomsticks and poles, and saw the victim on her knees pleading in her strange tongue for mercy; that turpentine was applied to the open wounds "to take the soreness out" and scalded feet bathed in a solution of hot water and wood ashes for the same reason—all this is considered most damning against the well-known woman, who has apparently already been condemned by the people of her city.

But she has not yet given her side of the case except through her physician and her husband, Moses Kaufman, president of the Sioux Falls Brewing Company and one of the most widely known and best liked men in South Dakota, and a politician of note.

They have declared that Mrs. Kaufman asserts that the Polce girl, suffering from vertigo, fell down stairs several times receiving her injuries in this fashion. But Dr. Germain, the family physician, who signed the death return stating that the girl died from natural causes, has revised his statement, stating now his belief that death resulted from wounds inflicted by some blunt instrument.

Miss Agnes Polce, the Poor Girl Parboiled to Death.

He has thus placed himself in an unenviable position as regards the law in South Dakota, which makes the returning of a false death certificate a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.

The doctor attempts to justify his act by the statement that, Mrs. Kaufman being a woman so well respected, he accepted her statement as to the cause of injuries.

All these facts were public property before the woman's arrest. But a preliminary examination of witnesses was to furnish evidence starting even to the prosecution itself.

Anna Jensen and Mrs. Oscar Larsen, former servants in the Kaufman home, testified that ten years ago Mrs. Kaufman lost a only daughter, and that since her daughter's death she has been unable to bear the sight of youth and health in other girls.

They swore that whenever Mrs. Kaufman saw a girl of the same age her own child would have been had she lived, the wife of the brewer became almost insane with desire to harm her.

The Demon in the House.

In the case of Agnes Polce the prosecution was greater than usual, as Mrs. Kaufman was heard to remark her resemblance to her dead daughter. The witnesses quoted Mrs. Kaufman as saying in Agnes's presence:

"Why should she live and my girl be dead?"

And then, as though possessed by a demon of cruelty, she would beat Agnes unmercifully.

The witnesses told how other girl servants were forbidden to look the doors of their rooms at night, and how they had been nearly frightened to death by the woman's appearance at their bedsides, gazing at them, while her features formed hideous expressions. Sometimes these girls had fled from garrets to cellars, pursued by their enraged mistresses, finally to flee from the house never to return, believing their lives in peril.

While this testimony was being given a furious crowd was gathering in the street. It was the intention merely to confine Mrs. Kaufman in her home pending trial on the charge of murder, but the angry crowd, which included many women, surrounded her residence and became so violent that the officials, guarding her, were compelled to take her to jail for safety.

As Mrs. Kaufman, her husband and Sheriff Phillips reappeared on the street, expecting to find their carriage waiting, they found themselves facing an infuriated mob.

"Lynch Her, Tear Her to Pieces."

Cries of "Tear her to pieces!" and "Lynch her!" arose and the crowd surged about the party. The prisoner struck behind her husband, who is a large and powerful man, and turned pale from fright. The party started to cross the street to the livery stable kept by Mayor Burdette, but the crowd, cursing and threatening, blocked the road. Women's high-pitched and excited voices raised the cry of "Tear her to pieces!" "Search her eyes out!" "Lynch her!" etc., and screamed, "She devil!" and "Murderess!"

Some women, with hats and dresses torn from contact with the crowd, struggled to the fore and spat upon the terrified woman. The men, who were in the minority, made vicious threats, but none took the initiative, and the prisoner was finally pushed into the livery barn. There she was placed in a closed carriage, a team was started on the run and the mob parted just in time to escape being trampled upon.

Mrs. Kaufman was taken home, where she had been a prisoner for a week. Hearing of this, the Parkton delegation from the girl's home, headed by William Fish, Justice of the Peace, declared he and his friends would not leave the city until Mrs. Kaufman was in jail. Talk of burning down the house and avenging the death of the young servant in summary fashion was heard.

Only Saved by a Ride to Jail.

This brought an order that the prisoner should be placed in jail, and she was removed by a detour of the back streets to a call in the big stone court house. The crowd refused to consider this a concession, feeling the seriousness of the offence warranted the same treatment for a rich woman as for a poor one. All day the situation remained critical, and at night a special guard was placed at the jail.

In justice to Mrs. Kaufman, it must be stated that as soon as it was known that she had been locked up, at least a score of the best citizens of Sioux Falls volunteered to open her cell door. Although formally constituted on the charge of manslaughter, she was released on June 25.

Mrs. Kaufman took her in a closed carriage from the jail direct to a train. Their destination was a secret that has not yet been revealed. It is believed that they have gone to recover from the strain of their recent career, and to face the trial which is inevitable.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

CHAPTER XVII. BUSTER BROWN

by R. F. Outcault

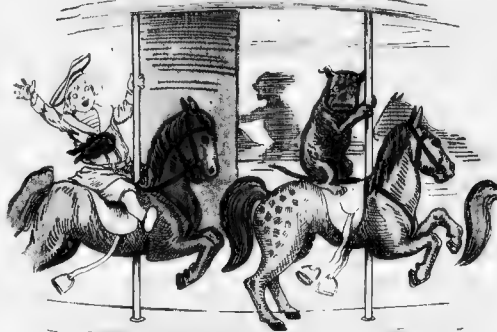

TIGER was taken with Coney Island that he wanted to go back again. He spoke about it so often that finally one day ma took us once more. Directly he landed on the pier he began barking with joy and coaxing for pennies to put in the penny-in-the-slot machines. He was weighed four times. He made a pretty good suggestion, too. It was to have a penny-in-the-slot machine with dog biscuits in it, so that dogs who had a penny or people who had dogs could get a biscuit. And he thought the biscuit should be named "Ugeta" dog biscuit.

Oh, Tiger is full of good suggestions, but they are TOO good. Lots of things in this world are TOO good. People don't want the best. They think they do, but you just follow some of them around a while and see what they get. A half million copies of some trashy song will sell while the most superb or dainty song by Greg or Chaminade will mold on the shelves. Half a million copies of some worse than trashy novel will sell while poems and essays rignon the shelves. Lots more looking glasses are sold than bookcases.

Tiger is not practical. He wanted a penny-in-the-slot machine made so people could drop a penny in the slot and get a card with some quotation from the poets or some helpful motto. "Oh, great! 'Quotation from the stock market, Tiger,' I said, 'I could handle it!'"

Why, they put a penny in one of the machines and get some snide perfume on their handkerchiefs. You can tell people by the perfumery they use (or DON'T use) without even looking at them. One of the greatest blessings in the world is that there is such a variety of people in this world with such a variety of tastes. Some men will walk right past a sweet and pretty girl and marry some old flat-faced gangster with a bad disposition, while a noodle-brained monkey will come along and get the sweet, pretty girl.

Tiger Was Fascinated by the Bathing Suite.

And yet there are people who think this world is a serious affair, who don't see how funny it all is. Those are the ones who are so busy thinking about themselves that they don't know they are living in a big vaudeville show.

Tiger shot the chutes until he had them shot full of holes, and he shot at targets until he couldn't even hit upon a good idea. He went in the surf until he was surfeited, the happiest farm dog I ever saw.

Tiger used to be a watch dog, but he was so sleepy that evening going home that he couldn't even watch the lights along the shore.

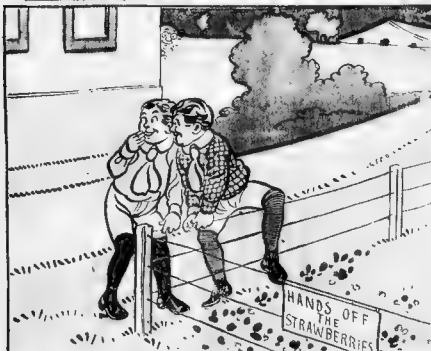

When he used to be chained to his kennel on the farm he called himself a watch and chain. He thinks that's a very funny joke.

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, JULY 8, 1906.

The World's Great Mothers---Always in the Shadow

MONUMENT is to be dedicated "To a great man."

The great man sits in bronze on horseback--set up where the world may look at him, the sparrows and the small boys wonder at him, during that brief period of time which we are accustomed to call "Forever."

The man in bronze sits stiff upon his bronze horse, while his body crumbles in some graveyard.

The MAN who made the statue bows and smiles AND HE FEELS PROUD.

The MAN born to talk well makes a fine speech of praise.

Some other MAN, Governor or Mayor, beams officially.

But who is the small, old, thin, unimportant-looking little WOMAN, almost out of sight, quite hidden in the shadow of the statue?

That is the MOTHER of the man in bronze. She is the woman who held that bronze hero in her arms when he was nothing but a little eight or nine pound lump of helpless flesh and blood.

She is the woman who gave the hero his life, his character, his brain, his training, AND HIS IDEALS.

That woman, the mother, made the man's brain first and shaped it afterwards. Her caresses, her kindness, her example and her words reached that childish mind during the early years from the hour of birth until the end of boyhood, YEARS DURING WHICH THE MAN IS MARRED OR MADE IRREVOCABLY.

And what does the crowd know of the woman, the mother, the REAL CREATOR, as it looks upon the monument that dominates the city's busy life?

No one knows where she came from, what her own name was; IT IS SUNK, OBLITERATED IN THE NAME OF HER HUSBAND AND SON.

No one asks how she bore the battle of life that she might give a great man to humanity.

The child in school is taught to venerate the hero for his courage in a battle where he was watched, where he was applauded, where he knew that reward was great and sure.

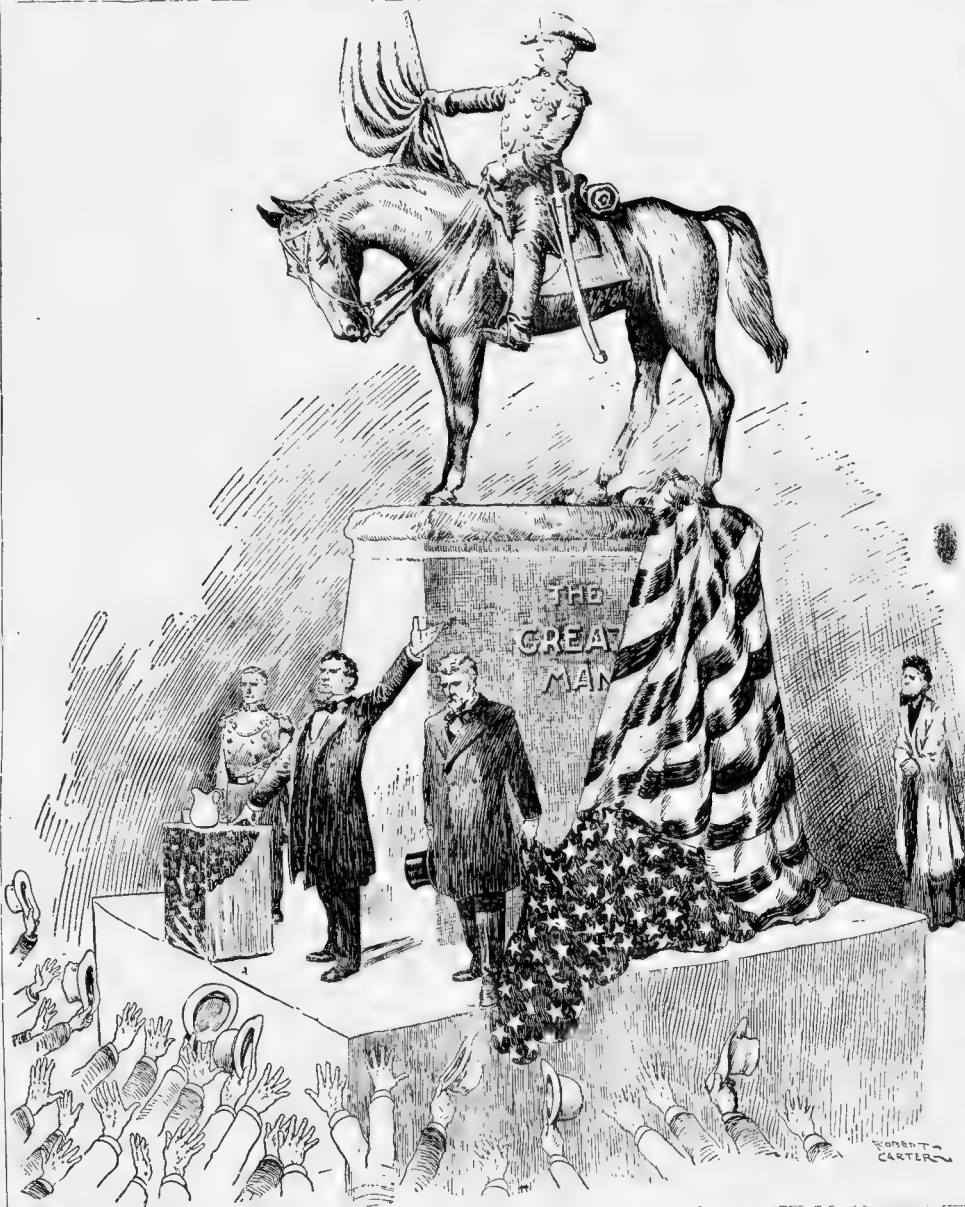

But who knows or cares anything about the courage of the mother in HER BATTLE. Who realizes the pain she suffered when she gave that child to the world, in the darkened room, no reward save the glory of doing her duty unobserved as millions of women do their duty every year.

Who knows or cares about any of the world's great mothers?

Human ingenuity exhausts itself in suggesting new rewards and honors FOR THE MAN OF ACHIEVEMENT.

Where are the monuments, where are the rewards for the mothers that GIVE us the men?

You see here the name of LINCOLN. A thousand pictures come into your mind. You see the boy studying by the light of the wood fire. You see the worn, earnest face of the grown Man. You see the courage, the patience, and the martyr's death. That homely, grave, beautiful face is as clear in your mind as though the great and simple man sat beside you.

The Monument, the Music, the Glory in Life, and Praises After Death, Are All for the SON. No one Knows About the Mother or Cares About Her.

But do you know anything about his mother? Has the world thought anything about her?

Mention the name of NANCY HANKS to a hundred men at random.

Twenty-five of them won't know of whom you are talking. Fifty will think you are referring to a famous race horse, and will tell you the trotting mare's record. The others perhaps will know that you are mentioning the name of the great woman who gave ABRAHAM LINCOLN to the United States.

That WOMAN saved this country, just as surely as Michael Angelo built St. Peter's at Rome.

We should be ashamed to look at the great cathedral or picture without knowing or caring anything about the architect or the painter.

How can we be so indifferent to the great mothers, the architects of the world's progress, the REAL creators, the REAL geniuses, the REAL benefactors of the human race?

How long will the world continue this injustice? How long will the mother stand unseen in the shadow of her great son's monument?

How long shall we talk of William the Conqueror and know nothing of the tanner's daughter who bore him?

How long shall we give our children every detail in the life and even in the dissipation of Leonardo da Vinci and have not a word to say about the simple peasant woman whose strong brain gave him his great ideas, whose strong body bore the burden of his name and his work?

What was the daring character of the woman who bore Christopher Columbus. It was HER blood that she put into his body that sent him across the ocean. What did we know about her? WHAT DO SONS DO WE EVER ASK ABOUT HER?

To the immortal glory of the Catholic Church it must be said that that ancient race, it has splendidly championed the glory and the sacredness of motherhood. Under the direction of that faith millions of mothers have been taught to look up to the mother who gave a Saviour to this world.

There is an example for all men, for all religions, and for all teachings.

What is the most splendid force conceivable? IS IT NOT THE POWER OF CREATION?

Think of the man who in your estimate is the greatest that ever lived and worked upon the earth. And then think of him at his birth, helpless in the arms of his mother. As you a man living there you know how absolutely he depends upon that mother. AND HOW ABSOLUTELY THE WORLD DEPENDS UPON HER FOR THE WORK THAT HE IS TO DO.

Does it seem possible that he should grow, become strong, and that the world should turn away from the woman that created him, forget her, put her aside?

Recognition of the dignity of motherhood, of the fact THAT THE SON'S WORK IS THE MOTHER'S WORK PRIMARILY should not longer be delayed.

For every monument to a great man there should be a monument to his mother, AND THE MOTHER'S MONUMENT SHOULD BE BUILT FIRST.

We do not honor the picture above the artist that painted it, or the law above the legislator who gave us the Law. Why do we honor a child above the mother?

As long as life shall last here, and as long as humanity shall struggle with the problems set before it, GREAT MOTHERS WILL BE THE WORLD'S GREATEST TREASURES.

It is true that the mother asks no reward but her child's success. The brave man often asks no reward but the success of his cause, AND WE HONOR HIM ALL THE MORE FOR THAT REASON.

For every profession EXCEPT THE PROFESSION OF MOTHERHOOD this nation offers reward.

The professional fighter, with the soldier's sword or with his naked fists, is honored.

The professional lawyer, politician, clergyman, money-maker, M.J. are glorified at the hands of their fellow men.

Isn't it time to recognize, to venerate publicly the greatest of all professions, that of motherhood?

Shouldn't this country be first to honor the women who have made it? Shouldn't it not at least NOW give to the mothers of the country a share in their government, the right to vote that is given to the vilest man?

Or are men in America, as elsewhere, forever to play the part of egotistical ingrates, forgetting or ignoring the power and love that gave them life?

JULY COSMOPOLITAN 10 CENTS

Cosmopolitan for July continues to improve on the high standard of magazine excellence that it has set month by month. This issue contains, among articles and stories of exceptional interest, the following:—

HOW THE ARMY WORKED TO SAVE SAN FRANCISCO by Brig.-Gen. Frederick Funston, U. S. A.

A brilliant, soldierly narrative, telling how the regular army labored in San Francisco after the earthquake, and during and after the fire completed the destruction of the city, to bring order out of chaos. General Funston tells the terrible truth of the catastrophe and of the splendid heroism of the stricken people. There are sixteen illustrations—a selection best adapted to give Cosmopolitan readers an exact idea of the facts. Two large pictures, 25 inches long and folded into the issue, show panoramas of San Francisco before and after its destruction.

THE TREASON OF THE SENATE by David Graham Phillips
(Expose of Senator Bailey of Texas.)

The expose of the Senatorial methods of political debauchery continues in July Cosmopolitan with renewed vigor. Senator Bailey of Texas, the "Democratic" leader of the "Merger," now falls under the lash of denunciations. This article tells how Senator Bailey got the notorious Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a subsidiary company of the Standard, back into Texas after it had been driven out by the people, and but a month thereafter purchased the splendid and costly Grapevine Ranch of 6,000 acres. This is one of the many acts which Senator Bailey has been unable to explain satisfactorily to thinking people of Texas.

By contrast with the "statesmen" of to-day, the political giants of this country's early history loom into colossal proportions; and the reading of their biographies points out what honesty of purpose in public life can accomplish. Andrew Jackson was one of those whole-souled, honest, shirt-sleeve statesmen who made this country's greatness possible. The "Story of Andrew Jackson," now running in the COSMOPOLITAN, is not a dry, matter-of-fact biography, but is a fascinating, brilliant historical novel, every word of which is true. Once having commenced to read it, you will not be able to lay the "Story of Andrew Jackson" aside.

Our First Great Mid-Summer Clearance Sales

From the view-point of bargain importance nothing equaling these sales will be held in Boston this year. They were planned for the purpose of cleaning up every stock in the store and no matter how desirable the merchandise, or how easy it might be to still secure full price, not a single exception has or will be made. Every thing designed for summer wear and use has been scheduled for quick sale by the adoption of a price that makes it irresistible, and we now notify the people of Boston, those who do not ordinarily trade here as well as those who do, that these sales cannot be missed profitably. They will begin when the store opens Monday at 8:30 a. m. and continue throughout the week. The prices quoted in this page are for Monday and Tuesday unless lots are sooner exhausted. Mail and telephone orders filled as long as lots last.

Bear in Mind This Fact: We Have No Old or Shopworn Goods to Foist Upon the Public.

Sweeping Reductions on Women's Clothing

Not one suit, whether it be made of cotton, light wool material or silk, has been reserved. All have been subjected to the most drastic reductions that have ever been made in Boston, and if our calculations come out as we have made them, there will not be one of these suits left when the store closes Tuesday. Among the suits and dresses that have been sacrificed are some of the most attractive models designed this year. In each instance we mention quantities and bona fide former prices:

Noted Men in Massachusetts May Be the Result.

District Attorney John B. Mora is still probing the sensational "special cases," which may involve the criminal prosecution of some of the most prominent men in Boston and the State, although the Suffolk County Grand Jury did not report on any of them when it returned thirty-seven indictments.

It was reported unofficially at the court house that at least two of the "special cases" will be brought to the attention of the grand jury at the extra session which will be held during the week beginning July 31. The special session in midsummer is an unusual proceeding, for it is customary to dismiss the July jurors for a month.
